MOSLEMS FIGHT FOR CHRISTIANS, BUT KEEP THEIR RELIGION

This picturesque scene was witnessed at the mosque at Woking, near London, when a large number of Mohammedans, principally British Indian troops assembled for prayer. The picture shows the "prayer," each worshipper with his face to the east, the Mohammedan Mecca.

BRITISH OFFICERS GET AWAY EASILY

From an Old Fortress in Holland as the Dutch Do Not Care to Shoot Them.

(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)
THE HAGUE, Netherlands, Aug. 30.—The ancient fortress of Wierickerschans where are interned the British officers of the Antwerp relief expedition which was forced by the Germans to retreat into Holland a year ago, occasionally loses some of its khaki-clad guests, notwithstanding that the Dutch profess to guard the place thoroughly. The British officers, like many of those interned in other camps in Holland, refuse to pledge themselves against trying to escape to England to re-join the fighting forces, and once inside the fortress these prisoners and the Dutch people disposed to make things easy for them. The guards at the camp are under orders to shoot any escaping prisoner, and it is true that they do shoot at them, but there is often something mysteriously poor about their aim. In fact if it were not for the constant arrival of ship-wrecked aviators, the quota of prisoners at Wierickerschans would not be long sustained. The fortress is an interesting place. Although visible from two railway lines, nobody seems to have been aware of its existence until the war brought it to notice. It is surrounded by a cluster of green trees and a broad moat, which makes it a virtually an island. Even the farmers who live nearby know so little of its origin that, with the historical generosity of the indifferent, they vaguely refer to the castle as dating back to the time of the Romans. As a matter of fact, the fort was built by King William of England, the Stadholder of Holland, and cannot be older than the year 1672. It was in that year that King Louis XIV of France invaded Holland and marched right up to Amsterdam. The country was at once flooded and several fortifications were built in this impromptu sea to guard the few high roads which could not be submerged. The deep and broad moat which surrounds the fortress is now used for fishing and swimming purposes by the forty-five British officers interned there. In the distance there is a pretty Dutch landscape, with red-roofed houses, clusters of trees, a few busy windmills, and a tiny sky, all of them suggestive of the liberty that is near at hand but which is barred by a double row of wire fences, both above and under water, and a series of armed Dutch guards. At night the entire zone of barbed wire and rifles is lighted up by strong arc lights, giving the old fort an appearance something like an American amusement park on a summer night. But when approached closely it is seen that mosquitoes and bats are the only ones to enjoy this beautiful glare. The occupants of the fort are safely locked up for the night and at 11 o'clock they are sent to bed.

For a year now these men have been in a prison which really is not a prison. If they were prisoners of war they could be treated severely and could be punished for the breaking of any rules of the camp. Since they are interned foreign soldiers and have not given their parole that they shall not try to escape, they are at perfect liberty to walk away any moment they see fit. When they are caught they are brought back but may renew their efforts the next morning and unless they actually destroy government property there is no way in which to punish them for the trouble which they have caused all around. As a matter of fact, the Dutch boy, who is standing guard, is not going to burden his conscience with the death of an excellent fellow with whom he has played games for many months and against whom he has nothing but friendly feelings.

As for the daily routine of the interned officers it can be well compared to a rather quiet watering place. The men have revived the games of their early school days and a few times a day indulge in a mild game of rounders. The British government has built two excellent tennis courts. The Dutch government has put up a jumping board and between 11 and 1 allows the men the liberty of the moat. A kind Hollander has installed a piano.
